WEDNESDAY EVENING, DEC 1.

The Printer's Query.
Tell us, gentle best,
Ye messengers of love,
Shall all die printers be below,
Have no address above?
The shining angel's hand replied:
To us is knowledge given,
Delight on subscription books,
O'er ever enter heaven.

SARAH BERNHART'S STAGE LOVER.—Mr. Angelo is probably a greatly excited man. He is in nearly all plays of her repertoire. Mr. Bernhardt's stage lover. He receives all of the glowing kisses, passionate embraces and radiant hugs which she has to bestow on the stage. It may seem a very delightful branch of the profession, particularly when it is remembered that in London at a society fair a man—supposed to be an American—who had already paid her £50 for a shake of the hand, offered to give her all he possessed in the world for a petit ailer upon which she promptly ordered one to be "fired out," which he instantly was. And yet it has its drawbacks. For instance, Miss Bernhardt's shoulder may be a very pleasant place to rest for a weary stage lover's head, but it is not to be thrust upon him when he is tired, and he has to turn around and wretched by her soft, glistening hands and equal number of times, so as to indicate the precise posture producing the most telling effect, the neck supporting that head is apt to become a little stiff and the process rather painful. —New York Herald
